Whooping Cough Treatment Continues

The Stuttgart Community Health Clinic continues to treat eight suspected pertussis patients with antibiotics, according to Community Health Nurse Terry Gorham. As a precaution, the clinic is also treating a number of others who may have been exposed to those exhibiting symptoms of the respiratory disease commonly known as whooping cough, Gorham said.

No cases of whooping cough have been confirmed, Gorham said. However, precautionary measures to protect community members against this disease are being taken to include interviewing close contacts and where appropriate providing antibiotic treatment as well as additional immunizations.

See attached flyer for more information on Pertussis and what you can do to safeguard your children. For more information about the disease call Community Health Nurse Terry Gorham, 430-8209/civ. 0711-680-8209.

Fighting Dog Law Includes U.S. Forces

A new ordinance passed by the state of Baden-Württemberg places stringent requirements on owners of three specific breeds and mixes of the breeds classified as fighting dogs. The breeds are Pit Bull Terrier, American Staffordshire Terrier and Bull Terrier. The ordinance applies to all residents of Germany including members of U.S. Forces.

The ordinance imposes three requirements on owners. All such dogs will be on a leash and muzzled when in public to include when the public might have access to the dog. All such dogs must be registered with German city or county authorities by Sept. 15. All dogs of any breed with a record of aggression are subject to these requirements.

The U.S. Forces Liaison Office for Baden-Württemberg is working closely with state officials to determine how registration, evaluation and other requirements of the ordinance will be implemented for U.S. forces. As implementation is developed, details will be made available through regular updates in 6th Area Support Group printed and electronic media.
